

Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA)

POLLING ONE-PAGER

The Becket Fund for Religious Liberty conducted polling in February 2023 to analyze both Americans and Californians' views about how to best serve children with disabilities. Here is what we found:

Survey
Instrument

2 Topical Questions

2 Polls, One representative of American adults and one representative of Californian adults

n>1,000 Sample Size per survey

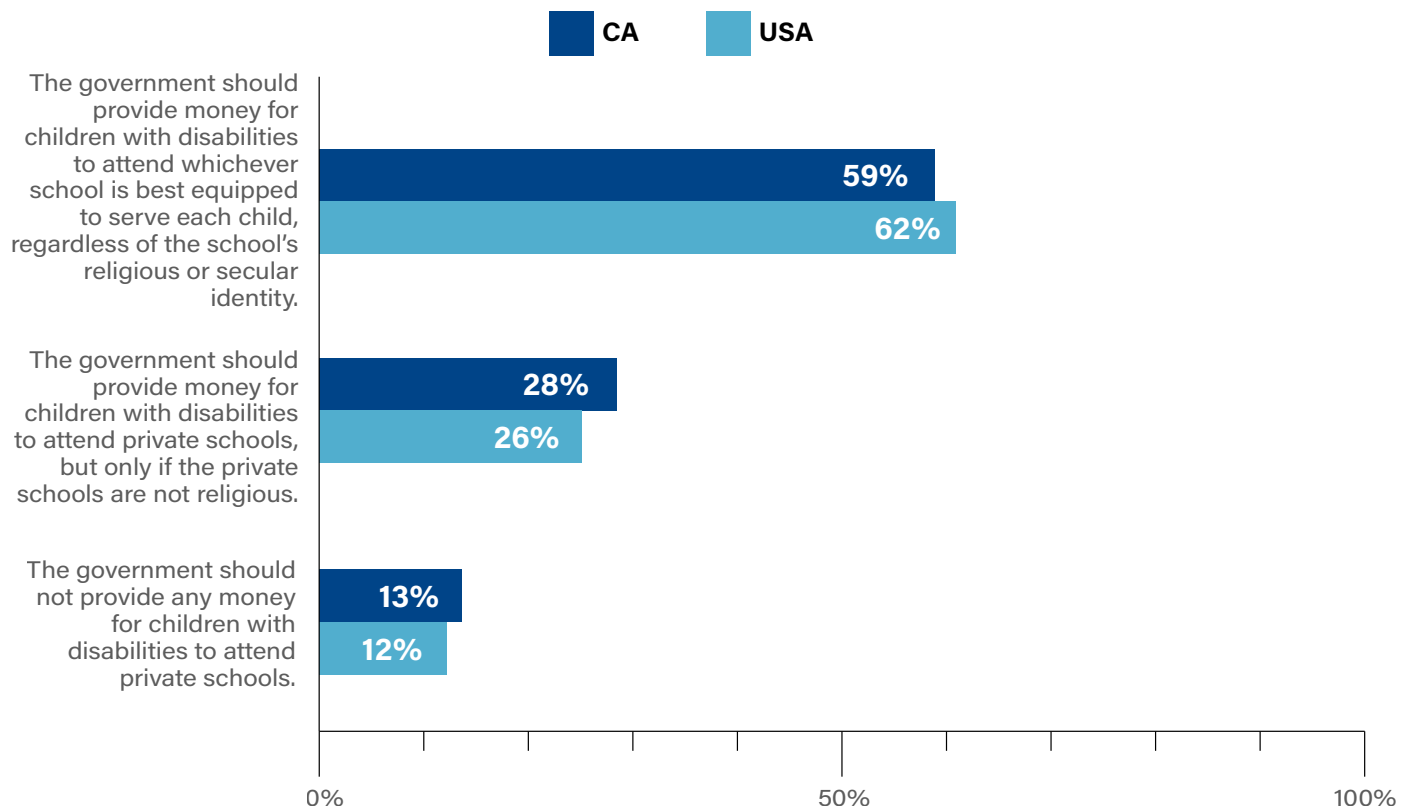

Momentive panel survey

Key Findings

1

Americans and Californians both think government assistance should follow children to whichever school best serves children with disabilities, regardless of the school's religious or secular identity.

The government sometimes provides money to send children with disabilities to private schools when they are better equipped to meet the child's individual needs than public schools. Do you believe that:

2

Americans and Californians are skeptical that public schools are doing a good job meeting the unique needs of children with disabilities.

Do you think public schools are doing a good job meeting the needs of children with disabilities?

